Common questions

Editing a review you wrote

To encourage honest and impartial reviews, we limit the ability of Hosts and guests to edit a review after they've written it. For stays, if you submit your review first, you may edit it anytime within the 14-day review period, up until the other party submits their review. Once both reviews are submitted or the 14-day review period has ended—whichever comes first—both reviews are automatically published and no more changes can be made. Find out how reviews work for stays. For Experiences, reviews are only written by guests. You may edit your review within 48 hours of initially submitting it, even if the review has been published. Find out more about how reviews work for Experiences.

Reviews for stays

Reviews are critical to help build trust on Airbnb—they're an important way for Hosts and guests to give each other feedback, and help our community make informed decisions and understand what to expect when making plans. We believe that a fair review system is one that respects and protects our community's genuine feedback, and we have a number of safeguards in place to help build trust in our reviews system.

Time frame for writing reviews

You have 14 days after checkout to write a review for a trip.
